Dear hiring committee,

I am writing regarding an opportunity to join Techouts as a Front-End Developer at the end of my undergraduate program. I found this job posting through Handshake and noticed that the skills you are looking for match those I have built during my college career. Moreover, Techouts commitment to extend the company's expertise and remain the future of business makes it a highly attractive environment to me. In a rapidly changing tech scene, it is important that the company I work for empowers its employees to stay up to date with the newest technologies.

One of the first points that caught my attention in your job posting is that you specified that you are looking for a self-starter to fill this position. The ability to be proactive is one that I have shown many times throughout my career. One of these examples happened in the summer of 2020 when I was hired by Athenahealth to be part of a team of interns who would start a new website within the company. While the team was focused on learning the technologies we were going to use, I jump-started the project by mimicking the base UI of the website. I was able to create the whole visual structure of the project before our first coding sprint officially began. This allowed the team to focus on developing the backend of the site, as well as importing it to the companies AWS cloud.

Another soft skill that is both important to me and for your company is the ability to communicate well within groups. One of my focus points through my college career was the development of my leadership skills, in this context communication was a constant worry for me. Besides my leadership projects as the president and founder of two RIT clubs, I decided to further develop this skill through some classes I took in my undergraduate program. The one that I believe will prove itself the most useful for any team I join is Organizational Behavior. Through this class, I learned how to maintain a successful and welcoming work environment by accessing team members' personalities and goals.

Thank you for taking the time to evaluate my experiences, I look forward to hearing from Techouts and possibly joining you in the future. I will follow up soon to schedule an interview and clarify any questions you may have about my experience.
Sincerely,
Giovana Puccini
